Brian Cooke's practice is focused on representing victims of mesothelioma. Prior to entering private practice, Brian served as both a prosecutor and a company commanding officer in the United States Marine Corps.

During his final year of active duty, Brian served in Baghdad, Iraq as a legal advisor to the Iraqi Ministry of Justice. He was the first Western attorney to appear and argue before the Central Criminal Court of Iraq, a judicial body comprised entirely of Iraqi nationals. His responsibilities included prosecuting crimes involving terrorism, political corruption, and organized crime.
