Leadership

Simmons Hanly Conroy brings centuries of collective experience to represent clients — individuals, families and businesses — that have been harmed through corporate or institutional wrongdoing. Our attorneys have a history of persevering for our clients amid the most challenging circumstances, fierce opposition and setbacks encountered during the progress of large individual cases and high-profile mass tort litigation.

Founded in 1999 by John Simmons as the Simmons Law Firm, the firm quickly developed a reputation in asbestos law by securing the largest single verdict in the history of the litigation. This landmark verdict demanded U.S. Steel to pay $250 million to a former steelworker who was diagnosed with mesothelioma after being exposed to asbestos at a steel mill.

Since then we have continued our leadership role as a powerhouse in the area of asbestos and mesothelioma litigation, filing hundreds of individual asbestos cases a year throughout the country and securing numerous settlements for our clients.

Simmons Hanly Conroy is also a leader in mass torts — cases involving many consumers who were injured by a defective drug or product. Our lawyers regularly serve on the executive or steering committees for some of the nation’s most high-profile multidistrict litigation (MDL), which includes Partner Jayne Conroy serving as co-lead of the national opioid MDL.

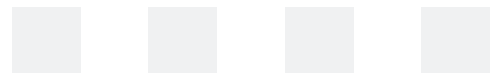

“The best part of my job is meeting with prospective clients. You’re not just a number. We’ll know your name. Someone will take your call and someone will call you back. We even place calls to our clients long after their case is resolved to make sure they’re doing OK.”

— John Simmons, Founder

Dangerous Drugs & Medical Devices

People trust that prescriptions and medical devices will help them, yet millions have suffered unnecessary harm or injury. Unfortunately, drugs and devices are often pushed to market by pharmaceutical companies without ample testing of the potential side effects.

Simmons Hanly Conroy has represented tens of thousands of individuals who were injured by dangerous drugs and defective medical devices.

Our lawyers have held leadership roles in groundbreaking litigation against Purdue Pharma and Abbott Laboratories, alleging 5,000 clients' addictions to OxyContin were a result of the manufacturers' fraudulent marketing campaigns that claimed the opiate was not as addictive as alternative drugs. We have secured over $1.7 billion in settlements from multiple major opioid manufacturers and distributors for Suffolk and Nassau County as well as the state of New York, its counties and New York City.

“I lost my wife to a heart attack caused by a dangerous drug. While nothing I do will ever bring her back, the Simmons Firm helped ensure that other people won't have to suffer the same loss as me. That product is no longer on the market and the company responsible for selling it to my wife has paid a heavy financial price for hurting people like her.”

— Jim, Simmons Hanly Conroy Client

Our lawyers currently serve in leadership positions — as appointed members of the Plaintiffs' Executive or Steering Committees — for some of the nation's most high-profile multidistrict litigation. MDLs are complex cases that share common issues and may involve many federal courts and hundreds or thousands of people who were harmed.

Current Investigations

Our success comes from our thorough understanding of our clients' particular medical histories, weighted against the manufacturers' legal obligations for testing, warnings and labeling. Our current dangerous drug and medical device investigations include:

- Bard® PowerPort™
- Allergan Breast Implant
- Breast Implant cancer
- Defective Military Earplugs
- Elmiron
- Exactech Ankle, Hip & Knee
- EzriCare® Artificial Tears
- Hernia Mesh
- JUUL and e-cigarettes
- Philips CPAP Machines
- Opioid Litigation

Mass Torts & Class Actions

Simmons Hanly Conroy represents consumers in class action and mass tort cases, seeking justice for those harmed by dangerous or unfair business practices. Consumer protection class actions can help protect American consumers by allowing a large number of individuals to hold large companies or business entities accountable for their bad conduct.

We have helped thousands of victims in some of the largest cases in the country get the medical help or financial resolution they need to be whole again. Our litigation attorneys have spent decades winning complex lawsuits against corporate and institutional defendants with practically unlimited resources.

Simmons Hanly Conroy attorneys have worked at the forefront of national cases, such as the Deepwater Horizon litigation, the Toyota unintended acceleration lawsuit, the GMO corn litigation against Swiss biotechnology company Syngenta and more. We are also proud to have represented thousands of family members of September 11 victims in their lawsuits against financial sponsors of terrorism and against airlines and airport security companies. The litigation settled for hundreds of millions of dollars in payments to clients of the firm.

We have a national reputation for litigating complex, cutting-edge civil litigation at the state and federal level. Because of our success, hard work and personal sacrifice, several of our attorneys have been appointed to national leadership positions in many mass tort cases — cases involving many consumers who were injured by a defective drug or product.

Environmental Litigation

Simmons Hanly Conroy has extensive experience helping clients challenge larger companies who have created dangerous, hazardous conditions by releasing toxic chemicals carelessly into the environment. These serious actions can have long-term implications on the safety and well-being of individuals and larger communities, which is why we are committed to providing justice to those who are harmed.

Our toxic tort attorneys have helped hundreds of people who have been exposed to dangerous chemicals and minerals such as benzene, cutting fluids and nuclear waste, enforce their legal rights in courtrooms across the country.

“It’s important to look at a case from all angles with compassion and common sense. I fight for people from all walks of life and dive into the details because I am determined to secure the best outcome for them.”

— Jo Anna Pollock, Partner

Sexual Abuse

Simmons Hanly Conroy lawyers have the experience and compassion needed to carefully and confidentially work with survivors of sexual abuse. We can help people of all ages, including children and adults who were abused when they were children by people who held positions of authority. This may include priests, teachers or other adults who worked for schools, religions institutions and other organizations.

On five separate trips, Simmons Hanly Conroy lawyers traveled to Haiti to investigate a sexual abuse case involving 24 Haitian boys who were victims of a pedophile whose charity work was sponsored by Fairfield University and the Society of Jesus. Because of the lawyers' extraordinary efforts, the firm was able to hold the following defendants responsible: Society of Jesus of New England, Fairfield University, the Order of Malta, Hope Carter, Father Paul Carrier and Fairfield graduate Douglas Perlitz. In 2013, this landmark sex abuse case settled for $12 million.

Since then, additional sexual abuse lawsuits against the institutions responsible have been filed. In 2019, a class action lawsuit resulted in a $60 million settlement for 170 Haitian nationals who were harmed by a convicted pedophile and former school administrator associated with a Jesuit school in Connecticut.

Our sexual abuse attorneys are committed to providing justice for these brave boys. Though litigation cannot change the past, filing a civil lawsuit can help prevent sexual predators from hurting others in the future and also provide financial compensation to survivors of sexual abuse.

“The incidents involving the Haitian boys are important reminders that sexual abuse of children is a worldwide crisis and not limited to the United States or even to the Catholic Church.”

Personal Injury Litigation

Many people who have suffered a tragic accident often require extensive surgery, physical therapy and rehabilitation. As they recover and face a huge financial burden, they may forget that they can hold the negligent party responsible for their actions. Anyone who has suffered an injury that wasn't their fault has an opportunity to hold companies accountable for their wrongdoing.

Simmons Hanly Conroy has decades of experience leveraging its resources to help people suffering from complex injuries. Navigating through the legal system to find compensation is much easier than you think with an experienced personal injury attorney by your side. Our lawyers will walk you through every step of the process, including filing the lawsuit, determining compensation, coordinating expert witnesses, gathering the correct documentation and evaluating settlements.

Filing a personal injury lawsuit will help to not only cover life-long medical expenses but to also hold the other party accountable for their negligent actions. We explore compensation for medical bills, ongoing rehabilitation, lost income, mental anguish, punitive damage and many other areas.

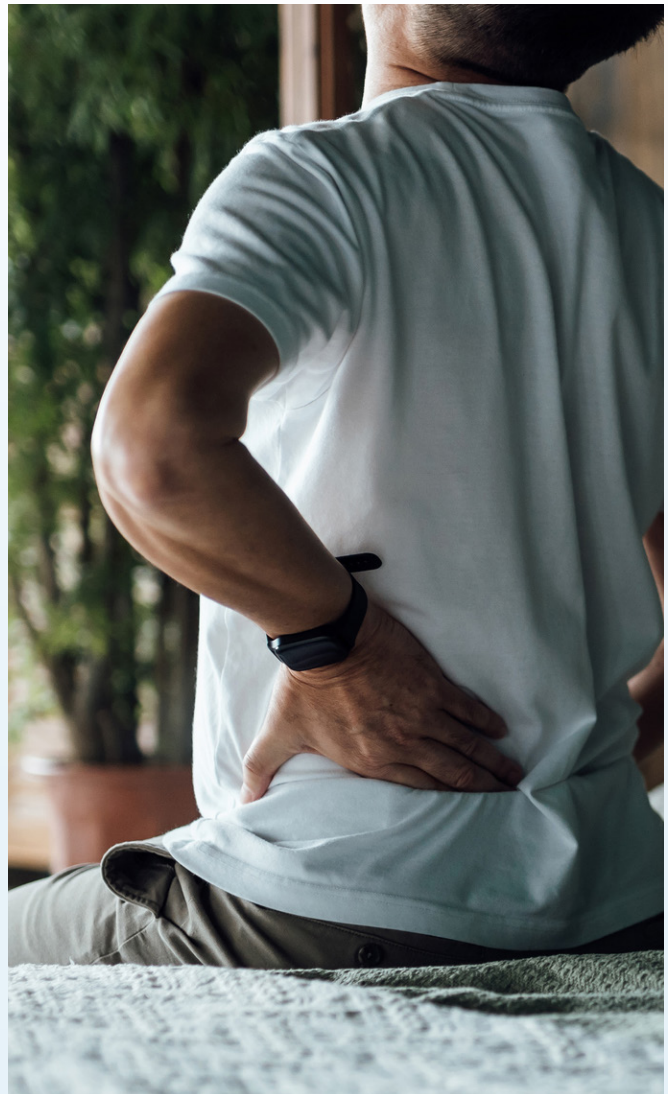

Results

Our success comes from our thorough understanding of our clients' particular circumstances, including medical history, the extent of injuries, details of the accident and more.
