

Currently Accepting Bard® PowerPort™ Case Referrals Nationwide

If a case involving Bard® PowerPort™ devices crosses your desk, we hope you'll think of us. Simmons Hanly Conroy has the experience and resources necessary to hold negligent companies accountable and fight for justice on behalf of your clients.

The Bard PowerPort system is a group of implantable port devices that can be inserted below the skin and connected to a catheter to deliver medication and fluids to the bloodstream. While all implantable ports may come with some risks, lawsuits claim there may be design elements specific to Bard PowerPort devices that may increase the likelihood of the device breaking down or fracturing.

Examples of alleged issues with implantable ports include:

- Catheter Fracture: If the catheter breaks within the veins, pieces of the catheter may travel throughout the body and cause internal damage.
- Catheter Migration: If part of the catheter moves or becomes dislodged, it may lead to catheter failure or other injuries.
- Infections: Small cracks that form on the device can allow bacteria and other pathogens to enter the body.
