If a case involving Depo-Provera® crosses your desk, we hope you'll think of us. Simmons Hanly Conroy has the experience and resources necessary to hold negligent companies accountable and fight for justice on behalf of your clients.

Depo-Provera, also known as medroxyprogesterone acetate, is an injectable birth control used to prevent pregnancy. This medication is typically administered every 3 months.

However, when taken for over 1 year, Depo-Provera may increase the risk of brain tumors called meningiomas by more than 5 times, according to The BMJ.

Patients may be able to file a Depo-Provera shot lawsuit against Pfizer, the manufacturer of this contraceptive, for failing to warn them about the potential dangers associated with this medication.

Your client may be eligible for the Depo-Provera meningioma lawsuit if they:

- Used Depo-Provera, Depo-SubQ Provera 104, or authorized generics for at least 1 year
- Received a diagnosis of a brain or spine tumor known as an intracranial meningioma
- Had or scheduled surgery and/or radiation to treat the tumor
