

Currently Accepting Social Media Addiction Case Referrals Nationwide

If a case involving social media addiction crosses your desk, we hope you'll think of us. Simmons Hanly Conroy has the experience and resources necessary to hold negligent companies accountable and fight for justice on behalf of your clients.

Social media platforms like Meta's Facebook and Instagram, Snapchat, YouTube and TikTok face an onslaught of social media addiction lawsuits nationwide.

Many of the lawsuits claim that the companies developed algorithms to lure teens into their platforms even though they knew it could cause harm. Thousands of pages of internal documents were leaked that show Facebook knew the harm it was causing — especially to its youngest users.

In fact, Named Partner Jayne Conroy has been appointed to the Plaintiffs' Steering Committee Leadership in the In re: Social Media Adolescent Addiction/Personal Injury Products Liability Litigation, which alleges social media platforms encourage addictive behavior in adolescents.

Since the destructive effects of social media addiction may be especially pronounced in younger users, victims may be too young to file lawsuits on their own. Simmons Hanly Conroy stands ready to help parents or guardians who may be able to file a social media addiction lawsuit on their children's behalf.
